```c
/*
 * Name: Rusho Binnabi
 * Date: 2/21/2022
 * Project: Temperature Converter
 * Code File Updated: 2/24/2022 at 9:31 PM
 * Contact Information: RushoBinnabi123@yahoo.com or 518-364-7101
 */

#include <stdio.h>
#include <string.h>
#include <conio.h>

int main() { /* the main() function has the code that's needed for my program to run. / float converttoCelsius(float c); / creates a float function called converttoCelsius() that has 1 float argument which is c which is the input temperature / / which is the temperture that the user enters and wants to have converted to celsius. / float converttoFahrenheit(float f); / creates a float function called converttoFahrenheit() that has 1 float argument which is f which is the input temperature / / which is the temperature that the user enters and wants to have converted to fahrenheit. */ float temperature = 0; // creates a float variable called temperature and is initialized to 0 which is the input temperature that the user enters which will be converted // into a fahrenheit or celsius depending on what conversion the user wants.

    char *choice; // creates a char pointer called choice that will store the character f or c which will be used to determine what kind of conversion the user wants.

    printf("\nEnter a Temperature: "); fflush(stdout); // prompts the user to enter a temperature. It flushes the buffer at the end.
    scanf("%f", &temperature); // scans that input from the user and stores it inside temperature as a float.

    printf("\nDo you want to convert this temperature to Fahrenheit or Celsius (f/c): "); fflush(stdout); // prompts the user to choose whether they want to convert the temperature that they entered into a celsiu scanf("%s", choice); // scans that input from the user and stores it inside choice as a string.

    if (*choice == 'f') { // deferences choice and checks if the value insie choice was f and if it was, then it runs the code inside the if statement.
        printf("\nThe fahrenheit conversion is %0.2f degrees fahrenheit\n", converttoFahrenheit(temperature)); fflush(stdout); // displays the fahrenheit conversion of the temperature that the user entered as a
    } // the end of the if statement.
    else if (*choice == 'c') { // deferences choices and checks if the value inside choice was c and if it was, then it runs the code inside the else if statement.
        printf("\nThe celsius conversion is %0.2f degrees celsius\n\n", converttoCelsius(temperature)); fflush(stdout); // displays the celsius conversion of the temperature that the user entered as a float round } // the end of the else if statement.

    getch(); // calls the getch() function which waits for the user to press a key so the program doesn't suddenly end and so the user can see the output without it stopping before they can.
    return 0; // returns a 0 which means the program was successful.
} /* the end of the main() function. / float converttoCelsius(float c) { / this converttoCelsius() function converts the given temperature by the user into a celsius temperature. / / It has 1 float argument called c which is the input temperature from the user that will be converted into a celsius temperature. */ float celsius = 0; // creates a float variable called celsius and is initialized to 0 which will have the converted celsius temperature from c. celsius = (c - 32) / 1.8; // calculates the celsius conversion of c using the formula for celsius and stores the celsius conversion inside celsius.

    return celsius; // returns celsius.
} /* the end of the converttoCelsius() function. */ float converttoFahrenheit(float f) { float fahrenheit = 0; // creates a float variable called fahrenheit and is initialized to 0 which will have the converted fahrenheit temperature from f. fahrenheit = (f * 1.8) + 32; // calculates the fahrenheit conversion of f using the formula for fahrenheit and stores the fahrenheit conversion inside fahrenheit.

    return fahrenheit; // returns fahrenheit.
} /* the end of the converttoFahrenheit() function. */
```